Examining qualitative data requires several steps. The method for analysing qualitative data involves finding and naming themes, narrowing down the number of topics, making a hierarchy of themes, and putting the themes into theoretical models. In this session, we will discuss Virginia Braun and Victoria Clarke's ideas and practices of thematic analysis (TA) and how they use it. The goal of the session is to help people who are thinking about doing qualitative research, who have qualitative data but don't know how to analyze it, and who supervise or help students use qualitative data
