Date; March 4, 2025, 4.00PM
Venue - Seminar Hall 1 Classroom Complex

Over the last few months, if not years, the issue of Artificial Intelligence (AI henceforth) has become all too pervasive. Regardless of specific dynamics of a given field or area of study, the use and possible effects of AI have become most frequent topics today. Whereas the positives of these effects have always been described with much excitement the not so productive or, rather, potential grey areas there have received much less attention.

The topic of AI is very relevant in the sphere of foreign language teaching and learning as well. With this broad view in mind the Department is pleased to invite you for a guest lecture by an eminent expert on the topic who has extensive experience in the field of foreign language teaching and learning
